Pamplona Bull Run: Tourists Injured

Does being chased by a 550 pound bull for 826 meters down very old, narrow and cobbled streets sound like fun to you? Well, every July the French city of Pamplona is home to the most famous Bull Run race in the world. Every year around half a million people flock to the San Fermin Festival in Pamplona to watch or take part in eight days of running with bulls. This year the festival was as popular as ever, despite the fantastic Spanish economy, with city officials hoping to earn around €70 million from visiting tourists.

It is of course very dangerous to run down the modern streets of Pamplona and injuries are common. This year three tourists were injured when a bull called Fugado ('Escapee' in English) attacked the crowd of spectators watching the first Bull Run of the tournament. The two Britons and an American were attacked by the bull and received cuts and bruises to their legs, arms and heads. Spanish Red Cross spokesman Jose Aldaba said the injuries were caused by Fugado when he broke free from the rest of the pack just before the end of the first morning’s run.

The Bull Run begins at 8pm during the San Fermin Festival and the rules are very strict. All runners must be 18 years old and not drunk. They must also run in the same direction as the bulls and not make the bulls happy. The race takes between three to four minutes to complete, although not all the runners finish the course. Some escape by jumping or climbing over fences and buildings to get away from the charging bulls. Each year around 300 people are killed whilst running the race, the last person to die was a Spanish man in 2010 who was trampled over and gorged to death during the race.
